A DICTIONARY

OF THE

FRENCH AND ENGLISH

LANGUAGES

By F. E. A. GASC

LONDON
GEORGE BELL AND SONS
1897

RICHARD CLAY AND SONS, LIMITED,
LONDON AND BUNGAY.

First published in Two Vols.: Vol. I., March 1873; Vol. II., August 1875.
Second Edition, in One Vol., 1877. Reprinted with additions, 1884, 1889, 1892, 1895, 1897.
Entirely recast and enlarged, 1897.

PREFACE

THE composition of an original dictionary, especially in two languages, is not the common sort of task that some people are apt to suppose, nor is its particular usefulness properly realized on all hands. It is a lifelong conscientious performance entailing great toil, the outcome of which is a work of constant and confiding reference, and one that cannot be valued too highly when thoroughly well done.

I began this dictionary in 1867, after supplying for years, con amore, my friend Dr. Spiers, the best lexicographer of his day, with many corrections and improvements for his larger work in two volumes, which friendly help he gratefully acknowledged in the preface to his later editions. Since the publication of my own volume in 1875, aspiring to a nearer and nearer approach to perfection, I made, at a heavy cost, a number of improvements and additions in every successive edition until, owing to the vast amount of changes which had taken place in both the French and English languages—many new words and senses having come into use while many old words and senses had become too obsolete—the time had arrived, as I thought, for a recasting of the whole, including the merging of the Supplements into the body of the work.

The present recast edition is not only much enlarged in contents and printed in a more compact form, but is in other respects very different from and far superior to the latest edition of the former work, and can compare advantageously with any existing French and English dictionary.

I need hardly say that I have endeavoured as before, in this recasting, to combine fulness of important matter as to entries, renderings, and phrases, with condensation and conciseness, and studied above all strictness of accuracy in the renderings,—the most essential but also the most difficult and consequently the most neglected part of bilingual dictionaries.

I have not given the figurative pronunciation, because I know this to be but a lure. Some so-called lexicographers may so far impose upon ignorance as to tell, for instance, the English student of French that garçon is pronounced 'garsong', and the French student of English that the is pronounced 'zi'; but such claptrap and misleading statements would be entirely out of place in a serious and conscientious work like mine. The general rules on French sounds (when practicable) found in my First French Book and easily mastered in a short time, supplemented as they are in this volume in special cases by particular signs the meaning of which is explained in the preliminaries, I consider quite sufficient on paper for the English student of French. Further knowledge can be acquired only from oral teaching. *

F. E. A. GASC.

BRIGHTON, January 1897.

* These remarks apply only to dictionaries, dealing as they must with isolated words, where limited space forbids directions as to nice modifications of sound, and not to M. Hugo's system, in connected sentences, with such modifications as explained at length in "Hugo's French Journal" for March 6, 1897, page 226, for March 27, p. 274, for May 29, p. 2, &c.

NOTICE.

In the case of many French words ending in isme and iste preceded by ion or on there are at the present time two spellings current, with a single n or with a double n, e.g. associationisme or associationnisme, Bourboniste or Bourbonniste. Inasmuch as the spelling with a double n is always optional, is not uniformly adopted (e.g. Littré writes associationisme and Bescherelle associationnisme, Bescherelle with Littré abolitionnisme and protectionniste but actionniste, sécessioniste, religioniste, révélationiste and papilloniste, Littré's supplement résurrectioniste and Bescherelle résurrectionniste, Littré with the Dictionary of the Academy bâtonniste but Sorboniste, from Sorbonne, violoniste and gasconisme, the Dictionary of the Academy and Bescherelle write feuilletoniste and so does Littré in the large work but feuilletonniste in the abridgment), and in the case of most words in -onisme, -oniste is never used at all, uniformity in this unimportant matter has been preserved in this Dictionary by retaining in all cases the spelling with a single n.

PLAN OF THE WORK.

† Indicates that the gn, l, or ll, is liquid.

‡ Means that ch is sounded like k.

ʻ Denotes that the h or a or o or u or y is aspirated.

* Indicates that the u in qu or gu is sounded as in "Aquatic" or in "Guano."

§ Indicates that the u in qu has its pure French sound.

Qu not preceded by either of the above signs, is sounded like q alone: thus quatre is pronounced qatre, qui is pronounced qi, &c.

— Stands for the repetition of the leading word.

- Before final letters or syllables, shows the masculine termination, when followed by the feminine: as Curieu-x, se, curieux, m., curieuse, f.; Protec-teur, trice, protecteur, m., protectrice, f.

Adjectives being part of a verb, such as Encourageant, 'encouraging,' 'inspiriting,' from ENCOURAGER, 'to encourage,' 'to inspirit,' Critiqué, 'criticized,' 'censured' from CRITIQUER, 'to criticize,' 'to censure,' &c., have been omitted whenever they have not a distinct sense from those given under the verb: it is the province of a grammar, not that of a dictionary, to conjugate verbs.

OBSERVATIONS.

§ 1. English and French words ending as mentioned below, generally differ only in their termination:—

Substantives derived from the Greek, and ending in English with logy, sophy, graphy, pathy, tomy, or any such way, change y into ie in French, and are feminine.

Examples:—

English.	French.
chronology,	chronologie, f.
philosophy,	philosophie, f.
geography.	géographie, f.
antipathy,	antipathie, f.
anatomy; &c.	anatomie, f.; &c.

Adjectives ending in English with ic or ical, generally end in French with ique for both genders; Adverbs formed from those adjectives, end in English with ically or icly, and in French with iquement.

Examples:—

English.	French.
patriotic,	patriotique
historic, historical,	historique
historically,	historiquement
publicly; &c.	publiquement; &c.

But the adjective 'public' is in French publique only in the feminine gender, the masculine being public, as in English.

Substantives ending in English with ism, generally end in French with isme, and are masculine.

Example:—

English.	French.
patriotism, &c.	patriotisme, m., &c.

Substantives and Adjectives ending in English with ist, generally end in French with iste; they are masculine when applied to a man, and feminine when applied to a female.

Examples:—

English.	French.
dentist,	dentiste, m.
pianist; &c.	pianiste, m.f.; &c.

Substantives ending in English with bility or bleness, generally end in French with bilité, and are feminine; as 'impossibility,' impossibilité (f.), 'instability' or 'instableness,' instabilité (f.), &c. So the student can easily translate himself, if he pleases, those which, like 'adaptability' and a multitude of others, are not sufficiently current to be allowed to fill, to the exclusion of far better words, whole pages in this Dictionary.

§ 2. It would be impossible to insert even in the largest dictionary all the compound nouns that may be formed in English. The following rule, about those which can be translated almost literally into French, will be useful. The order of the English nouns is to be inverted in French, and de or à placed between them:

DE, where of, of the, made of or from, composed of, forming part of, coming from, &c., may be understood;

A, where for, used for, intended for, for the purpose of, by means of, with, &c., may be understood.

Examples: table DE cuisine (kitchen-table), table A thé (tea-table); robe DE soie (silk-dress), ver A soie (silk-worm), ver DE terre (earth-worm); sac DE papier (paper-bag, made of paper), sac A papier (paper-bag, for putting paper in); sucre DE canne (cane-sugar), canne A sucre (sugar-cane); moulin A eau (water-mill), chute D'eau (water-fall); boite A couteaux (knife-box); bain DE pieds (foot-bath); huile DE foie DE morue (cod-liver oil); vin DE Bourgogne (Burgundy wine); confitures DE fraises (strawberry jam); train DE Londres (London train); gare DE Paris (Paris terminus); &c.

There are a few exceptions, as 'salle de bains,' 'salle de danse,' 'cabinet de toilette,' and the like. But, with a verb, à is always used; as chambre A coucher (sleeping-room), salle A manger (dining-room), papier A écrire (writing-paper), cire A cacheter (sealing-wax), &c.

In a determinate sense, the article du, de la, des, is used instead of de only, and au, à la, aux, instead of à only: as, 'the street-door' (the door of the street), la porte DE LA rue; a 'letter-box' (for the letters to be sent by post), une boite AUX lettres; &c. In speaking of made-dishes and drinks, and in the sense of 'mixed with' or 'done in' or 'composed chiefly (but not entirely) of,' au, à la, aux, are also used; as, du café AU lait, une glace A LA creme, une tarte AUX confitures, &c.—So, according to this and to the principal rule, 'a currant jam tart' is, in French, une tarte AUX confitures DE groseilles; &c.

Connected with the above rule are phrases of the following kind: 'silver-mounted penholder,' porte-plume monté en argent; 'marble-top dining-room table,' table de salle à manger à dessus de marbre; 'blue-striped waistcoat,' gilet à raies bleues; 'double-cased watch,' montre à double boite; 'double-bedded room,' chambre à deux lits; 'a one-horse carriage,' une voiture à un cheval; 'a four-horse goods van,' un fourgon de marchandises à quatre chevaux; 'a two-storied house,' une maison à deux étages; 'ivory-handled knife,' couteau à manche d'ivoire; &c. In these examples it will be noticed that à is used as corresponding to the English 'with,' in the sense of 'having,' which is understood. See Gasc's Second French Book, pp. 75, 76. and 151.

An essential difference of construction in the two languages is this: the French people always go from the general to the particular, while the English go from the particular to the general.

Examples: 'Cod-liver oil,' huile de foie de morue;—'annual general meeting,' assemblée générale annuelle;—'Thames iron ship-building company, compagnie de construction des bateaux en fer de la Tamise; &c.

 After names of recipients, such as verre (glass), bouteille (bottle), tasse (cup), &c., DE always means 'of,' or 'made of,' and the construction is then usually the same in English and in French: as, verre DE vin, 'glass of wine,' bouteille D'encre, 'bottle of ink,' tasse DE café, 'cup of coffee'; bouteille de grès 'stone bottle,' tasse de porcelaine, 'china cup,' &c. But, on the contrary, after the same names, A is not translated into English, and an inversion of the words must then always be made: as, verre A vin, 'wine-glass,' bouteille A encre, 'ink-bottle,' tasse A café, 'coffee-cup,' &c.

§ 3. PLURAL OF SUBSTANTIVES.—Substantives generally end in the plural with s, in French as well as in English; as père, 'father,' pères, 'fathers,' &c. Adjectives, in French, generally end also with s in the plural; as, bon père, 'good father,' bons pères, 'good fathers.'

Yet œil, 'eye,' makes yeux in the plural (except in the compounds œil-de-bœuf, œil-de-chat, &c., used in a figurative sense, plural œils de bœuf, &c., where œils is pluralized regularly); likewise ciel makes cieux in the plural (except when it signifies the testers of beds, the roofs of quarries, 'skies' in painting, or climates, in which senses it makes ciels); also aïeul, in the sense of 'ancestor,' makes aïeux in the plural, but in the sense of 'grandfather' it makes aïeuls, to designate both grandfathers, the paternal and the maternal (sometimes also both one's grandfather and grandmother considered together). The following, bonhomme, gentilhomme, monsieur, monseigneur, madame, and mademoiselle, make in the plural bonshommes, gentilshommes, messieurs, messeigneurs, mesdames, and mesdemoiselles.

Besides the general rule just mentioned, the following peculiar rules and exceptions are worth notice :

FRENCH SUBSTANTIVES AND ADJECTIVES ENDING IN THE SINGULAR WITH—al change l into ux for the plural; as, cheval, plural chevaux ; royal, plural royaux ; &c.

EXCEPT :—

	PLURAL.
bijou	bijoux
caillou,	cailloux
chou	choux
genou,	genoux
hibou	hiboux
joujou,	joujoux
pou,	poux

s, x, z, do not change at all for the plural; as, bras, plural bras ; divers, plural divers ; noix, plural noix ; sérieux, plural sérieux ; nez, plural nez ; &c.

NO EXCEPTION.

The adjective tout makes tous in the plural masculine, and toutes in the plural feminine; but the substantive tout makes touts in the plural.

Words naturally invariable, and which are only accidentally employed as substantives, do not take the mark of the plural in French ; thus we write les pourquoi, les car, les si, les oui, les non, les on dit, les pour et les contre (the pros and the cons), &c.

§ 4. PLURAL OF COMPOUND SUBSTANTIVES.—Compound substantives which have not yet passed to the state of words, that is to say, whose distinct parts are connected by a hyphen, are written in the singular or in the plural, according as the nature and particular sense of the words of which they are composed require the one or the other number. [In compound nouns, the only words susceptible, by their nature, of taking the mark of the plural, are the substantive and the adjective.] Such is the general principle, whose application will be facilitated by the following rules.

1. When a word is composed of a substantive and an adjective, both take the mark of the plural; as,

une chauve-souris,	a bat,	pl. des chauves-souris.
une basse-cour,	a poultry-yard,	— des basses-cours.

To this rule there are a few exceptions; as, UNE grand' mère, plural DES grand'mères.

N.B.—GRAND, without apostrophe, always agrees in gender and number with its substantive, but GRAND' is always invariable.

2. When a compound word is formed of two substantives placed immediately one after the other, both take the mark of the plural; as,

un chef-lieu,	a county town,	pl. des chefs-lieux.
un chou-fleur,	a cauliflower,	— des choux-fleurs.

The exceptions to this rule take place when there is no plurality in the idea conveyed by one or the other of the two substantives ; as in UN hôtel-Dieu (un hôtel de Dieu), a name given to the principal hospital, or infirmary, of several towns in France ; plural DES hôtels-Dieu. Also UN timbre-poste (un timbre de la poste), a 'postage-stamp' ; plural DES timbres-poste. Also UN appui-main (un appui pour la main), a 'maulstick' ; plural DES appuis-main. Also UN brèche-dents (une personne qui a une brèche dans les dents), plural DES brèche-dents.

3. When a compound word is formed of two substantives joined by a preposition, the first only generally takes the mark of the plural; as,

un arc-en-ciel,	a rainbow,	pl. des arcs-en-ciel.
un chef-d'œuvre,	a master-piece,	— des chefs-d'œuvre.

Except when there is no plurality in the idea conveyed by that first substantive ; as, UN tête-à-tête, plural DES tête-à-tête. UN coq-à-l'âne, an unconnected, nonsensical speech, passing from one thing to another quite opposite, as from a cock to an ass ; plural DES coq-à-l'âne. UN pied-à-terre, plural DES pied-à-terre ; &c.

4. When a compound word is formed of a substantive joined either to a verb (though used substantively), a preposition, or an adverb, the substantive alone takes the sign of the plural, but only if there be plurality in the idea. So we write with an s in the plural :

un avant-coureur,	a forerunner,	pl. des avant-coureurs.
un contre-coup,	a counter-blow,	— des contre-coups.

But we write without an s in the plural, because the expressions are elliptical, and there is unity in the idea :

Des réveille-matin (clocks which awake in the morning),	alarm-clocks.
Des contre-poison (remedies against poison),	counter-poisons.
Des grippe-sou (people who gather money sou by sou, or a 'halfpenny' at a time),	money-grubbers.

Finally, we write with an s, in the singular as well as in the plural, because there is always plurality in the idea:

un essuie-mains (that which wipes the hands)	a towel,	pl. des essuie-mains.
un porte-cartes (that which bears a person's cards)	a card-case,	— des porte-cartes.
un cure-dents (that which cleans the teeth)	a tooth-pick,	— des cure-dents.
un tire-bottes (that which pulls off a pair of boots)	a boot-jack,	— des tire-bottes.
un garde-côtes (a man or a vessel that guards the coasts)	a coast-guard,	— des garde-côtes.
* But we write un tire-bouchon (that which draws the cork of a bottle)	a cork-screw,	— des tire-bouchons utensils which draw the corks of bottles).

5. When a compound substantive contains only such parts of speech as the verb, preposition or adverb, none of its components takes the mark of the plural; as,

un passe-passe,	a sleight of hand,	pl. des passe-passe.
un passe-partout,	a master-key, a pass-key,	— des passe-partout.

6. When a compound onomatopoetic substantive expresses no more than a sound, neither of its parts takes the mark of the plural; as,

un tic-tac,	a tick-tack, &c.	pl. des tic-tac.
un clic-clac,	a cracking (of a whip),	— des clic-clac.
un cric-crac,	a crick-crack,	— des cric-crac.
un bo-ouo,	a bow-wow (dog's bark),	— des bo-ouo.

But when a substantive of this form expresses not simply a sound, but a thing, person, or animal, that makes the sound, the second part takes the mark of the plural; as,

un tam-tam,	a tam-tam,	pl. des tam-tams.
un cri-cri,	a cricket (insect),	— des cri-cris.
un guit-guit,	a guit-guit (bird),	— des guit guits.

 The French lexicographers generally have omitted to mention the plural of this kind of compound substantives, except Littré and Bescherelle (LEW edition), who have cri-cris; Noël and Chapsal, who have tam-tams; and Bouillet (Dictionnaire des sciences), who has tam-tams and guit-guits. Bescherelle's new edition also has guit-guits. As to the Académie, their writing guits-guits shows here again their usual ignorance of analogy in the French language.

VERBAL ADJECTIVES.

Participles of verbs used as adjectives agree, in French, in gender and number with the noun or pronoun to which they refer; as,

Un homme charmant (from Charmer, 'to charm').
Une femme charmante.
Des hommes charmants.
Des femmes charmantes.

Un livre bien écrit (from Ecrire, 'to write').
Une lettre bien écrite.
Des livres bien écrits.
Des lettres bien écrites.

NOUN-ADJECTIVES OF COLOUR.

Substantives used adjectively to express colour remain invariable, as, Des gants PAILLE (straw-coloured), des robes NOISETTE, des rubans CERISE: and so forth with MARRON, ORANGE, PUCE, MAUVE, CARMIN, PONCEAU, AMARANTE, JONQUILLE, GARANCE, COQUELICOT, OLIVE, MAGENTA, and the like, which are all substantives used as adjectives. But rose, violet, pourpre, blanc, jaune, bleu, vert, and the like, being adjectives, take of course both gender and number.

ADJECTIVES, &c. USED SUBSTANTIVELY.

Adjectives used substantively to express the names of languages are all masculine (the substantive masculine idiome being understood): as, le français, l'anglais, l'allemand, l'italien, le latin, le grec; parler français, en français, parler anglais, en anglais, &c.

In general, adjectives, verbs, and the uninflected parts of speech taken substantively, are masculine. Examples: le bon, le mauvais, le dormir, un oui, un non, un mais, un si, le pourquoi, le parce que, &c.
